The survey of likely voters by the research group Insa for the German daily Bild showed that the SPD, which won the last elections in 2013, would lose its lead over the AfD for the first time, ending four years of alternating right- and left-wing government. With 40% of the vote, the AfD is far ahead of the SPD, which is on 24%, the conservative Christian Democratic Union (CDU) on 21% and the liberal Free Democrats (FDP) on 10%. The poll, released on Sunday, comes at a difficult time for Angela Merkel's CDU, which has dropped in the polls and has been hammered by the chancellor's decision to give full German citizenship to around 1 million immigrants from eastern Europe
